- An undisclosed number of Yugoslav Chetniks, fleeing Yugoslavia, arrived in Udine, Italy on 15 August 1948.
- The escaped Chetniks stated: "The Chetnik movement of resistance against the present Tito Government and its Cominform opposition is increasing daily on a nationwide scale."
- The escaped Chetniks were members of a Yugoslav guerrilla unit which was captured and almost annihilated by Yugoslav Army troops during July 1918.
- The commanding officer of this guerrilla unit, a certain Neskovic, and the leader of all Moslem guerrillas in Eastern Bosnia, Sukrija Ajanovic, were killedo
- 5. "Terrible reprisals" were taken against inhabitants of those areas in which members of the guerrilla unit sought refuge, with an estimated 173 persons killed in the village of Kamena and Drobnica and most of the homes set afire in the village of Borika.
